It's rather tiresome to discuss issues that no longer have meaning. In Cloud Atlas the character played by Tom Hanks climbs up some unknown Hawaiian mountain to find a communications portal to the stars. I assume they chose the Island as an geographic opportunity because it hadn't been fully stacked with condominium debris and retained some reliance on the wonders of plant life. Thus, we must preserve some local open spaces otherwise where will the futurists build this portal to the stars? I live locally and would really miss this future opportunity to be humans last resort in this post apocalyptic scenario. What is "Last Resort" in Hawaiiin ...maybe that should be the name of the park adjacent to the "dog park" which is a horrible name for any stretch of geography. I know this looks as if it is written by a bored schizophrenic but honestly did you really want to read another canned missive that really won't make any difference in the long term?
